

A WORKING GAME CONCEPT

Mushroom Moon

Forage by day. Brew your defenses.
Protect the witch's hut by night.

A mobile game idea by Eston and Simon

Cozy magic / hands-on brewing / night defense

Every potion has a purpose.

The player lives in a woodland hut. Each day brings a short foraging trip and time at the cauldron. At night, creatures emerge from the forest. The potions made that day become traps, wards, and last-second throws.

01

FORAGE

Find mushrooms, herbs, and rare ingredients in the woods.

02

BREW

Crush, steep, and combine ingredients to discover useful effects.

03

FORTIFY

Place bottled brews along the paths leading to the hut.

04

DEFEND

Use spare potions as the night attack unfolds.

THE CENTRAL CHOICE

A rare glowing mushroom could become a powerful path trap, a potion held for an emergency, or an experiment that unlocks tomorrow's recipe.

ONE HUT. TWO PATHS. A DIFFERENT BREWING PLAN EACH NIGHT.

Brewing drives the defense

Potion effects become easy-to-read tools: spore clouds slow a crowd, sticky syrup holds a path, and a moonlit ward protects the hut. The player chooses where to place each brew before nightfall, then throws saved bottles at key moments.

A cozy forest with a little bite.

Warm storybook textures and oversized mushrooms make the world inviting. Night shifts the palette to violet and deep blue, while potion effects glow clearly against the paths. The creatures can be mischievous and strange without becoming frightening.

FIRST PLAYABLE VERSION

- 1 hut with two approach paths
- 5 ingredients to gather
- 4 potion effects to discover
- 3 nights of increasing pressure

THE QUESTION TO TEST

Is making a potion satisfying on its own - and does seeing that same potion save the hut make the next brew even more exciting?
